Starting out in a small warehouse on Polk Street in 1917, former professional pastry baker and candy maker Louis Neiman began selling only sugar but expanded to other ingredients such as flour and shortening when the business began to grow. Even as business boomed, the commitment to quality service remained. Today, Laura Neiman, representing Neiman Brothers' third generation, is carrying on the family tradition of providing consumers with high-quality ingredients from all over the world.

"I think Chicago is a great city for businesses because there are so many cultures and ethnicities. Food is incorporated into people's lives in profound, fun and exciting ways." —Laura Neiman

DID YOU KNOW?

- Neiman Brothers is one of the largest processors of honey in the country
- When Louis Neiman's two sons, Seymour and William, joined the business, the three men began creating their own homemade fruit fillings, flavors, cake and cookie mixes, and spice blends
